Abdulla Al-Naimi Call Prep

Abdulla Al-Naimi — Discovery Call Prep

Sunday 15 Nov 2026, 11:00 Doha / 10:00 Beirut, 30 min, Google Meet

1. Who he actually is

Managing Director and owner, Doha Business Consulting (DBC), Palm Tower B, Doha. Founded 2011 or 2013 (sources differ). 11–50 staff, aggregators estimate ~15 staff and ~$6M revenue (unverified).

What DBC does: market entry for foreign companies into Qatar. - Company formation: LLC, trade representation office, engineering LLC, ready-made companies - DBC becomes the Qatari corporate partner in the LLC (the local sponsor), so the foreign company doesn't need to find one - Government procedures, trade missions, business sponsorship, legal, PR, feasibility studies - Claims 1,000+ companies set up in Qatar

Investment background (this is why he replied to the VC angle): - Investment Manager, Qatar Science & Technology Park: due diligence and strategic support for international startups entering Qatar - Owner / MD, Aslan Investment FZE (Dubai, 2015–2017), managed a $50M diversified portfolio - 500 Startups alumni/involvement - Mentor, TASMU Accelerator (Qatar's smart-city programme, government-backed) - Board member and chair of the advisory board, GroviaHub LLC - Advisor, Sampac Ventures (Samudra Pacific Capital Partners) - Advisor, TESLA Venture Studio - Spoke on exit strategies at ROWAD 2025

Name: "Abdulla", no H. His LinkedIn and his email both use it.

2. What this means for you

Your opener said "the corporate VC model you helped create in the Gulf." That's not quite his story. He's a market-entry operator with a VC background. Don't repeat the line on the call. Reframe to his actual business.

The real opportunity is a channel partnership, not one client.

DBC’s entire customer base is foreign companies landing in Qatar. Every one of them has the same problem the week after the licence is issued: no pipeline, no local sales team, and a founder or country manager who can’t justify local hires yet. That is exactly your product.

He also has a second problem you solve: the companies he’s set up need to show traction to stay in Qatar, and he’s the sponsor on the licence. Dead companies are bad for him.

Three ways this goes: 1. Referral partner. DBC refers newly licensed clients to Vanguard for outbound. You pay a referral fee or revenue share. 2. Bundled offer. “Licence + first 90 days of pipeline.” DBC sells it, Vanguard delivers. His margin on top of yours. 3. Direct client. DBC itself needs outbound to foreign companies considering Qatar. Lowest value, but the easiest first deal and it proves the product to him.

Push for 1 or 2. Offer 3 as the proof point if he’s hesitant.

3. The call, revised

0–3 min. Open. One line on you, then his story. > “Thanks for making the time. Short version of me: I run the venture arm inside Vanguard Services in Beirut, and the operating business builds outsourced SDR teams for companies selling into markets they don’t have people in. I did my homework on DBC. A thousand companies into Qatar is a serious number. How did it start?”

3–15 min. Discovery. Find the gap after the licence. 1. “What does a typical client look like? Sector, size, where they’re coming from?” 2. “Once the licence is issued and the LLC is live, what happens in their first 90 days commercially?” 3. “How many of them arrive with a contract already in hand versus arriving to go find business?” 4. “The ones who struggle, what’s the usual reason? Is it product, pricing, or they just don’t have anyone making calls?” 5. “When a client asks you ‘who can help us find customers here,’ what do you tell them today?” 6. “How many new companies are you setting up per month right now?”

Question 5 is the one. Question 6 tells you the size of the channel.

15–22 min. Position. Only after he’s described the gap. > “That gap after the licence is exactly where we sit. A company lands in Qatar, has no pipeline and can’t justify local headcount yet. We stand up a two- or three-person SDR team in a few weeks, Arabic and English, working Gulf hours, on a monthly fee. They keep the closers and the relationship. We feed them qualified meetings. For your clients it’s the difference between a licence that produces revenue and one that sits there.”

22–28 min. The partnership ask. > “Here’s what I’m thinking. Your clients need pipeline the day the licence is issued. We could be the team you point them to, either as a referral with a fee back to DBC, or as something you bundle into your own offer. Which of those would make sense on your side?”

Let him react. If he’s interested in the bundle, that’s the bigger business. If he wants referral only, take it and build from there.

28–30 min. Close. > “I’ll send you a one-pager on the model and pricing today so you have it when a client asks. Can you think of one or two current clients who are at that stage right now? I’d like to start with a real case.”

Get a name or a yes before you hang up.

Rules: - Don’t mention LvlUp or Boardy unless asked. One identity. - Don’t say “corporate VC.” Say “market entry” and “after the licence.” - Don’t pitch before minute 15. - Write down every company and sector he names. - If he asks price, answer immediately. Numbers in section 5.

4. SDR one-pager (send after the call)

Vanguard Services — Outsourced SDR Teams for Market Entry

The problem. A company lands in a new market with a licence and no pipeline. Local sales hires are expensive, slow, and hard to justify before there’s revenue.

What we do. We build and run a dedicated outbound team for your business, from Beirut, working your target market’s hours. The team books qualified meetings. Your closers take them.

What’s included per seat - Full-time dedicated SDR, Arabic and English - Prospect list building and data (Apollo, LinkedIn Sales Navigator) - Multi-channel outreach: calls, email, LinkedIn, WhatsApp where appropriate - CRM setup and reporting (HubSpot or your own) - Team lead oversight, weekly pipeline review with you

Speed. Team live within 2–3 weeks of kickoff.

Pricing. $1,300 per SDR per month. Minimum 2 SDRs. Month-to-month after a 90-day pilot.

90-day pilot, 2 SDRs: $7,800 total. Target outcome: a working outbound engine, a qualified pipeline, and the data to decide whether to scale or hire locally.

Why Beirut. Native Arabic and fluent English, Gulf timezone, a fraction of GCC hiring cost, and a bench of experienced outbound reps.

5. Pricing to quote on the call

Package	Seats	Monthly	90-day pilot
Pilot	2	$2,600	$7,800
Standard	3	$3,900	$11,700
Growth	5	$6,500	$19,500

If he asks “what’s in it for DBC”: - Referral: 10% of first-year fees on any client he refers. On a 2-seat pilot that’s $780 to him, $3,120 on a full year. Small but real, and it compounds across his volume. - Bundle: he sells at his price, you wholesale at $1,300. He keeps the spread. Suggest he lists it at $1,600–1,800 per seat.

Don’t go below $1,300. If he pushes on price, trade on term (6-month commitment) or volume (3 seats), not on rate.

6. Things to have ready

- One name you can introduce him to after the call. A Lebanese or regional founder looking at Qatar is ideal.
- The one-pager above, cleaned into a PDF on Vanguard letterhead.
- Your Vanguard email, not Gmail, for the follow-up.

Sources

- LinkedIn: Abdulla Al-Naimi, Doha Business Consulting
- dbc-qatar.com (team page, services)
- TASMU Accelerator mentor profile
- GroviaHub and Sampac Ventures LinkedIn announcements
- ZoomInfo, RocketReach, about.me aggregator profiles (unverified figures)